

Looking For A Friend

One day there was an adventurous, cute, grey little mouse. He was very lonely and wanted to have a friend. He was so lonely, but he made his way to the zoo to look for a friend.

The mouse first came across a fierce red fox in a cage at the zoo. The mouse asked, "Will you be my friend?" The fierce fox replied, "No, but I will eat you!" The mouse ran as fast as he could away from the fox. He decided to keep looking for a friend.

In the next cage, the mouse saw a beautiful peacock with his feathers spread out. The mouse asked, "Will you be my friend?" The beautiful peacock shook his beak and said, "I cannot be your friend because I cannot break a feather." The mouse sadly walked away. He really wanted to find a friend, so he kept walking through the zoo.

All of a sudden, the mouse saw a very, very big and tall giraffe standing in a very, very big and tall cage. The mouse asked, "Will you be my friend?" Even though the mouse asked the question as loud as he could, the tall and big giraffe did not hear or even see the mouse. The mouse was about as lonely as he ever had been. He was ready to leave the zoo to go home to be alone.

The mouse was very sad. As the mouse walked and walked, he then turned to go out of the zoo's front gate. The mouse bumped into another mouse. That mouse had a red bow in her hair and looked so sad. Then mouse quickly asked, "What is wrong?" She answered, "I do not have a friend."

The mouse could not believe it, so he said, "Well, I have been looking for a friend all day. I would be happy to be your friend!" The mice became best friends from that day on. The End!
